In Canada, people living with HIV have been criminally charged, convicted and sent to prison for not disclosing their HIV status before having sex. HIV disclosure and criminal law bring together many complex legal and social issues. People living with HIV, and people who provide services to them, want to know:

- In what circumstances do people living with HIV have a legal duty to disclose their HIV status before having sex?
- What can happen to them if they fail to disclose their HIV status even though they have a duty?

PRESENTED BY GLENN BETTERIDGE
LEGAL RESEARCHER AND COMMUNITY ADVOCATE

This community forum is open to people living with HIV and other interested participants.
